Gender inequality in Sri Lanka Gender inequality in Sri Lanka is centered on the inequalities that arise between men and women in Sri Lanka. While Sri Lanka is ranked well on several gender equality indices in comparison to other countries in the region, there are also some sources that question the verity of these indices. Specifically, these inequalities affect many aspects of women's lives, starting with sex-selective abortions and male preferences, then education and schooling in childhood, which influence job opportunities, property rights, access to health and political participation in adulthood. Overall, this pattern of social history that disempowers females produces a cycle of undervaluing females, providing only secondary access to. However, globally, Sri Lanka ranks relatively lower on gender equality indices.
